OXBERGER, C.J. 287

Respondent-husband appeals from the judgment and decree dissolving the parties' marriage. We affirm.

Respondent first contends that the trial court's award of child support for the couple's two children was excessive. Factors affecting an equitable determination of child support are set out in Iowa Code § 598.21(4)(a-i)(1983).

The parties' two children are ten and six. At the time of the marriage, both parties were enrolled in drafting school. Husband completed drafting school and wife dropped out to marry him. They married in 1975. During the course of the marriage, wife operated a babysitting service out of the parties' home. Wife is thirty-six and husband is thirty-one. Wife has a fourteen-year-old daughter who was financially supported by husband during the marriage. Wife had $390 per month gross income. Husband's gross income is $1991.

Husband suggests wife's alimony should be limited to a three-year rehabilitation period. The trial court provided alimony would cease when wife remarries or either party remarries. We do not believe wife could financially support the family on $100 per month alimony and $480 child support and health insurance and attend school. Husband cannot afford to pay more alimony. We find the alimony should terminate at the time specified in the trial court's decree and additionally should terminate when the youngest child is eighteen, self-supporting, or completes high school, whatever event occurs first.

The trial court ordered husband to pay child support of $480 per month for two children. We do not consider this inequitable in light of husband's gross income of $1991 per month and wife's income of $390 per month. Costs are taxed to husband.

AFFIRMED AND MODIFIED.
